NEW ELECTION PLANNED ON PROPOSED ANNEXATION

A second petition signed by residents of the North Fair Oaks district and asking that an election be called that the residents of that district may vote on the proposition of annexation to Redwood City, was received by the board of trustees Monday night. The petition this time was signed by 27 residents of the district in question, a number in excess of the number required in such cases.

An election was held recently in this district after a similar petition had been received by the board. At that time the proposition failed to carry, mainly it is thought, because of misunderstanding among some residents of the district, who are anxious to see their property annexed to Redwood City feel that another election would be carried by a large majority.

The petition was received by the board and City Attorney Mansfield was instructed to prepare the neccessary proceedure. The matter will be taken up at a special meeting of the board next Monday.

He was a familiar figure at the court house, where he came almost weekly to file claims. Everyone knew him and he always had a kind word for all. TAXI WARFARE BROUGHT BEFORE TOWN TRUSTEES

The battle between the rival taxi companies which has raged in this city for many years, was again brought to the surface Monday evening, when C. F. Tammany, proprietor of Tammany's Taxi, appeared before the city body and stated that rival taxi firms were crowding him out of parking space at the S. P. station. Another company Tammany explained, operated six machines. There are only six parking spaces by the station where the taxis stand, and by filling up all available spaces, Tammany stated, he was being crowded out of his stand.

The board took the matter under consideration, and will consider the suggestion that one space be allotted to each of the six companies operating in this city. It was suggested by Chief of Police Collins that these spaces be alotted by drawing lots. This will be the probable proceedure of the board.

Sells Old Jewell Family Home

The old Jewell home on Arguello street was sold this week, through L. A. Heiner, the realty broker, to a Mayfield capitalist, who is to wreck the old building and construct a modern structure. Thus one by one the old land marks are giving way to modern conditions and development. The Jewell home was erected in the sixties by Joshua Snow and for many years the imposing dwelling and attractive garden around it was the show place of Redwood City. For many years the place was the home of the late Henry Jewell, a Redwood City pioneer. The old capitalist also owned a tract of land at Belmont on which was a very cosy cottage. It was in this cottage that the late Senator William Sharon first established Sarah Athea, later installing her in his mansion at Belmont. The litigation that followed is a matter of court record.

LEGALITY OF BELMONT INCORPORATION IS QUESTIONED

Whether or not Belmont can remain incorporated as a city of the sixth class will depend upon a decision of Attorney General U. S. Webb. The members of the board of trustees of the recently incorporated town have been summoned to appear before the attorney general and show cause why D. W. Burdett should not sue in the name of the state for the disincorporation of the city.

According to Burdett, who is the owner of a tract of 30 acres within the limits of Belmont, the incorporation proceedings were illegal without his specific permission to the inclusion of his land. The Belmont trustees contend, however, that a month was allowed for the hearing of protests and that as Burdett filed no protest at that time, that he is not within his rights to protest at the present time.

At a meeting of the board of trustees held this week, the board voted to take every means in their power to avert a disincorporatton of their city. City Attorney Sherman was authorized to take the necessary legal proceedings in the matter.

In case Attorney General Webb decided that there is merit to Burdett's case, the latter will file suit in the local Superior court in the name of the State of California, asking that the incorporation proceedings be declared illegal.

FUNERAL RITES HELD FOR PIONEER TEACHER

Funeral services were held Thursday in St. Catherine's church in Burlingame for Miss Rose Meehan, pioneer teacher of this county, who passed away early this week at her home in Burlingame. Services were conducted by Father Power of Burlingame and were followed by interment in Holy Cross cemetery at Colma.

Miss Meehan was for 41 years one of the best known teachers of this county, and many of the county's most prominent residents were instructed by her. She began teaching at Denniston and later taught at Montara, Halfmoon Bay. For 21 years she was principal of the central school in San Mateo. Here she labored until the time of her retirement about a year ago. Miss Meehan was known from the time she began her profession as an inspired instructor, and this reputation she maintained throughout her career.

Miss Meehan taught Peter B. Kyne, the noted novelist, and Mrs. Elizabeth M. Kneese, the popular county clerk of San Mateo county while they were in the elementary school. Both attended the Montara school, while Miss Meehan was the principal there.

The church in Burlingame was packed with sorrowing friends of the pioneer teacher, and was banked with floral tributes of affection. Six life-long friends and associates of Miss Meehan, acted as pall bearers. They were William F. Turnbull, George W. Hall, Roy W. Cloud, William J. Savage, Gus B. Risso and James Mullen.

Firemen Enjoy Pleasant New Year's Eve Party

Members of the Redwood City Fire Department and their invited guests enjoyed what has been called the most pleasant party ever given by the local firemen. The affair was the annual New Years Eve dance and supper of the firemen, and took place in the fire house. The auditorium had been elaborately decorated for the occasion with serpentine and ballons. Each guest was given a horn and a paper cap.

The old year was sent off in high feather by the merry-makers, and at midnight the call was sent out that dinner was served. Tables had been set down stairs while the fire equipment had been driven out to make room for the festivities. A delightful repast was served and dancing resumed in the auditorium. The party broke up at about 3 o'colck.

All arrangements had been made for the pleasant affair by a committee of the firemen, consisting of the following members of the department: Chief Mark Ryan, A. W. Russell, Harry Groom Bert Werder and I. C. Drathman.

FILE ACCOUNTING IN COBURN ESTATE

The Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco, trustee under the will of the late Loren Coburn, for the estate of Wallace Coburn, incompetent son of the late captitalist, had its sixth annual report and account allowed and settled in the Superior court on Thursday. The account showed the total receipts for the year to be $14,082.65 and total disbursements of $11,705.93, leaving a balance of $2,376.12. The income is derived from interest on bonds, mortgages, etc., on nearly $200,000 provided by a trust formed by the terms of the will of Loren Coburn.

The account of the guardian of the person of the incompetent son, C. H. Widemann, also came up for settlement but the guardian did not fare so well with the court as the Trust Company. His account showed the total receipts to be $12,280.80, disbursements $8,920.36, leaving a balance of $3360.44. Widemann was severely reprimanded by the court, who said that his account showed the claim of Dr. Thompson for $550 to have been paid but there was no voucher on file. Widemann started to explain but he was abruptly stopped by the court and unless the voucher was presented very soon Widemann would be removed as guardian and continued further hearing of the account for one week. E.Cullinan appeared for Widmann but he was absolved from all blame in the matter by the court.

Ross & Ross of this city appeared for the Trust Company.

RESOLUTIONS TO THE MEMORY OF MRS. OSBORN

There are times when the hand of God seems to bear more heavily upon our hearts than at others—especially so in the calling of our loved ones from our midst.

The sudden calling of Mrs. Belva Mae Osborn from the family and friends and her many activities in the church was a severe shock to all.

RESOLVED: That the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Redwood City Methodist Episcopal church of which she was the secretary express their sincere and tender sympathy to the bereaved husband and children and other relatives.

Her cheery presence and helpfulness will be sadly missed by all who knew and loved her.

We trust that the consolation of the Heavenly Father be fully realized by the family in this their hour of great need, and may the bright hope of reunion again gladden each dawning day.

RESOLVED: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, to each of the local newspapers and spread upon the minutes of the W. H. M. Society.

Cornell Gets Track Date at Princeton

Cornell was added to another Princeton sports schedule to replace Harvard, when it was announced by the athletic association that the Ithacans will meet Princeton next spring on the track. The meet is scheduled for May 21.

A two-year agreement was signed by the Princeton and Cornell athletic board, which states that Princeton will meet Cornell in Ithaca next spring, and in Princeton in 1928. Cornell also appears on the Princeton 1927 football schedule for the first time in 20 years.

Princeton and Cornell have been closely allied in track for several years, having teamed together in 1921, 1925 and 1926 to meet the combined Oxford-Cambridge track team.

OHIO STATE WILL LOSE MANY STARS

Karow's Going Leaves Big Gap Hard to Fill.

Sixteen Buckeye athletes finished their gridiron careers at Ohio State last fall and included among the group are some of the best players developed at Ohio State in recent years. Capt. Marty Karow, fullback, heads the array and his departure will leave a hole that will be hard to fill. Other veterans who have completed their gridiron careers are Myers Clark, quarterback; Ed Hess, guard; Alex Klein, center; Bill Hunt, halfback, the two first reserve guards, Fritz Mackey and Bill Reed and nine others of real ability who have played well for the Columbus eleven.

Coach Wilce and his assistants, however, will have about twenty-five veterans left on the squad and as the freshman material is considered fairly promising, the outlook for a strong eleven next fall is considered good. The graduation group is one of the largest which has ever left the football ranks.

Bob Bell, relief fullback, is expected to replace the brilliant Marty Karow. Red Oshner and Lincoln Cory are other promising fullbacks. Howard Kriss, a sophomore, is the best of the quarterbacks, none of whom approach Myers Clark, who will graduate. Kriss is one of the fastest men on the squad and if he develops, this important detail in the back field will be well cared for.

Jack Ullery, Fred Preston and Bill Edwards of the freshman eleven are the leading candidates for the center berth. Edwards was one of the mainstays of the yearling line all fall and it is highly probable that he will win the berth from his upper classmen rivals. The guard problem is difficult as six of the leading men for these important positions are through with football. Ted Meyer is the only player left with experience at guard and it seems likely that the coaches will change some of the tackle and center material into guards.

The other veterans available are Rowan, Robin, Bell, Ackerman, Alber and Surina, ends; Uridil, Raskowski, Cox, Lacksen, McMillen and Nesser, tackles; Eby, Grim, Kruskamp and Marek, backs, and a number of reserves.

Jones Obeyed Rules in Playing First Big Game

Back in 1919, a tow-headed, seventeen-year-old boy entered the Southern Amateur golf tournament at New Orleans. In the qualifying round, he played his ball off the first tee with unfortunate accuracy. Gracefully it soared toward the green, landed in a wheelbarrow and rolled into an old shoe.

The boy was puzzled. Was he permitted to take the ball from the shoe? Ordinarily a player couldn't touch the ball or improve his lie. Uncertainly, he climbed onto the barrow, steadied himself precariously, took a husky swing with his niblick, and played both shoe and ball well onto the green. The ball rolled out of the shoe, and the young player narrowly missed his putt for a three.

The boy who was so anxious not to break a tournament rule was Robert Tyre Jones of Atlanta, Georgia—now, the world's greatest golfer. — The American Boy.

Chicago Cubs Release Two

The Chicago Cubs released two players in consideration of deals made before the season closed. Hank Schreiber, shortstop, was turned over to the Mobile club of the Southern league, as part payment for Catcher Harry Wilke, and John (Mandy) Brooks to the Louisville club of the American association, in the deal for Outfielder Earl Webb. Schreiber went to the Cubs from Indianapolis along with Riggs Stephenson, while the Chicago team got Brooks from Columbus.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

The "California Marcher," 75 years old, has invited President Coolidge to visit California and now he's tramping through the fifty-eight counties to see that all is in readiness for a presidential call. The self-styled "marcher" is Henry B. Stewart of San Diego who announced upon arrival in Sacramento recently that he has spent the last seventeen years hiking up and down the landscape of this and other countries. The aged hiker recently returned from a transcontinental tramp during which he invited President Coolidge to California.

State officials made the surprising announcement that "the mourning bride" and "the tree of heaven" are running wild in the San Francisco bay district. That sounds bad, and so it is, but only from the standpoint of plant quarantine. The state department of agriculture says that the ailanthus, which the Chinese call "the tree of heaven," and the scabiosa, otherwise "the mourning bride" are growing wild in the flower yards of San Francisco and have become such pests that steps for their control have become necessary.

The phenomenal growth of the small town of Elk Creek, Glenn county, resulting from its being made the headquarters of the crews at work on the new Stony Ford dam, has resulted in a critical condition in the high school. In fact, the outlook is that the institution will be forced to close because of lack of quarters for the additional enrollment. Only two teachers have been employed, and as the appropriations are based on the attendance of last year, on funds are available for the employment of additional teachers.

A machine that he positively guarantees will capture all hit-and-run autoists, that never can get out of order, that runs equally well in the brightness of noonday or in the deep darkness of midnight, is described in a letter received by Assemblywoman Cora Woodbridge from one of her constituents. He asks that she sponsor a law compelling every car to have one of the devices attached. Mrs. Woodbridge says she has taken the matter under advisement.

Plans are being prepared by architects for a group of class "C" frame and brick veneer high school buildings for the Pittsburg high school district, to be erected at Pittsburg, Contra Costa county. The work will cost about $175,000. Bonds to the amount of $225,000 have been authorized by the electors. The group will include academic building, gymnasium and shop buildings. Later science and auditorium buildings will be erected.

Holding that extravagance in construction of public school buildings can and should be curbed by closer co-operation between state and local school authorities, Will C. Wood, state superintendent of public instruction, is advocating creation of a state division of school planning, which would be part of the state department of education and would advise with local boards as to building projects, capital outlays and bond issues.

Several years ago an automobile supplanted the horse and rig.

Immediate construction of three subways at railroad grade crossings on the state highway between Auburn and Colfax are strongly recommended in the report of the Placer county grand jury filed with Superior Judge J. Urging the state government to employ the money accumulated in the treasury from surplus brokers license fees for advertising California in the eastern states, H. L. Finlay, addressing the Glendale Realty Board, declared that this surplus, estimated at $500,000, could not be put to better use than to encourage immigration to California.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

(© by Dodd, Mead & Company.)

Arnold von Winkelried

SANDWICHED in between several large European nations is a little, mountainous country made up of twenty-two tiny states. These states differ from each other in religion, politics, industries, language and a hundred other points. Yet each and all are spendidly patriotic and united in their compact little federation. Their unity and freedom were bought by centuries of bloodshed and heroic resistance of stronger powers. This confederation of united provinces, or "cantons," is Switzerland.

It consists of former fragments of Italy, Germany and France welded into one nation. A few of these cantons banded together in 1291 in a defensive alliance against any outside foe, but particularly against Austria. Other cantons from time to time joined the alliance, until by the end of the Fifteenth century Switzerland was practically an independent country, with German, French and Italian as its official languages. The chief promoters of the original union were the men of the Schwyz valley, and from these the names "Swiss" and "Switzerland" are derived.

Switzerland's oldest and most relentless enemy was Austria. Austria was a duchy, not an empire, in the early stages of the struggle and was ruled by the Hapsburgs. The Hapsburgs, eager to annex new territory, encroached on Switzerland. The hardy mountaineers endured but a brief period of tyranny and soon flew to arms against their oppressors. Two heroes stand out as foremost in beating back the invaders.

In 1315 an Austrian governor, Gessler by name, was put in charge of the Uri district of Switzerland. Among other acts of tyranny he caused his hat to be mounted on a pole and commanded all passersby to bow to it. William Tell, a peasant, happened along, his crossbow slung over his shoulder and leading his little son by the hand. He refused to salute the hat. Gessler ordered his arrest. Learning that Tell was a famous marksman, the governor ordered him by way of punishment, to shoot an apple off his own son's head. Tell accepted the perilous test, and at the first shot split the apple in half without injuring the boy. Gessler was about to release him, when he noticed a second arrow stuck through the peasant's belt and asked why it was there.

"To shoot you if I had slain my son!" was Tell's reply.

Gessler, in fury, commanded him to be bound, thrown into a boat and rowed to the governor's castle on Lake Lucerne. On the way a storm sprang up. The boat was in danger, and Tell, being a skilled sailor, was unbound and set at the helm. He steered the boat on a rock, leaped ashore and escaped, shooting Gessler through the heart as the latter reached land. Tell then fled to the mountains and rallied his countrymen to resist the Austrian punishment that was certain to follow. Nor was he mistaken in his belief, for the Austrian Archduke Leopold, with nearly 20,000 men, invaded Switzerland.

Less than 1,500 Swiss gathered to oppose the invasion, and took up a position at the top of a steep mountain pass at Morgarten. The Austrians charged up the slippery slope, but were met by an avalanche of tree trunks and bowlders hurled down by the defenders. After a fruitless effort to overcome the handful of mountaineers the Austrians were driven back in wild disorder, leaving 1,500 dead on the field.

This victory attracted other cantons to the federation and taught Europe a wholesome respect for the plucky little states. But sixty years later Leopold III, nephew of the archduke who was so soundly trounced at Morgarten, led an army 6,000 strong against Switzerland. About 1,600 Swiss advanced to check him; and on July 9, 1386, the two armies met on a meadow slope near Sempach.

The ground was uneven and marshy and broken by streams and hedges. The heavy-armed, mounted Austrians could not deploy in such quarters as rapidly and skillfully as the lightly equipped Swiss infantry. Yet by force of numbers they made headway against the weaker foe and left no weak place in their barrier of spear-points through which the patriots could break. They were rapidly surrounding the Swiss preparatory to cutting them to pieces, when Arnold von Winkelried, from the canton of Unterwalden, rushed forward against the serried line of Austrian spears, and shouting, "Make way for Liberty!" grasped all the spears within his reach and gathered their points to his own breast. As he fell, pierced through and through, the weight of his body dragged the spears' points earthward with him, leaving a gap in the Austrian line which his comrades rushed though, over his dead body.

The result of the battle of Sempach was to break Austria's power in the united cantons. Other nations from time to time attacked the little free country, but with no better result.

And so, through the centuries, the tiny independent nation, whose watchword was "Liberty!" wrenched victory from adversity and freedom from the stronger hands of oppression, proving, even as the United States was later destined to prove, that mere force and tyranny can never bind men who are resolved to be free.

One Hundred Per Cent Misery

Young America yields grudgingly to education. A group of boys riding to school on a street car showed their scorn of various subjects by the inscriptions they had printed on the edges of their books. Various designations, such as "brain food," "bunk" and the like amused the passengers, who kept an eye on the group. But the concentrated hatred of one subject was shown on a dilapidated algebra, which was inscribed "100 per cent misery."—Indianapolis News.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Doings of Congress Prior to Adjournment for Christmas Holidays.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CONGRESS adjourned Wednesday night for the holidays, and will not reassemble until January 3. Though the house was quite busy in the week preceding the recess, most of the interest centered in the senate. Tuesday night the house river and harbor bill was put to a vote, and despite the bitter attack that had been made on parts of it, the measure passed by the overwhelming vote of 57 to 9. Those voting in the negative were Couzens of Michigan, Frazier of North Dakota, Howell and Norris of Nebraska, Lenroot of Wisconsin, Willis of Ohio, Republicans; and Blease of South Carolina, Ferris of Michigan and King of Utah, Democrats. As passed by the senate the measure carries appropriations of $75,000,000, almost $10,000,000 in new projects and surveys being added in the closing hours of debate. Therefore it went to conference, but with a certainty that the differences would be adjusted.

For the Middle West the item of great interest is that providing for completion of the Illinois river link of the lakes-to-the-gulf waterway by the construction of a channel in the river nine feet deep and 200 feet wide from Utica to its mouth. A clause was inserted which specifies that the measure shall not be construed as authorizing water diversion from Lake Michigan.

"This gives Illinois a gateway to the ocean," Senator Deneen asserted. "We will be on the longest waterway in the world, running from the Gulf of Mexico to the St. Lawrence river. The Illinois provision satisfied the senate and I am sure it will satisfy the house."

Aside from the Illinois improvement, the most important items in the measure include an authorization of $12,000,000 for beginning the improvement of the Missouri river between Kansas City and Sioux City; an agreement for the purchase of the Cape Cod canal for $11,500,000, and $4,000,000 authorization for the construction of the intracoastal waterway from Jacksonville, Fla., to Miami.

Senators Gooding of Idaho and Pittman of Nevada attempted to tack on a long and short haul rider but were defeated and said they would bring up that measure at a later date.

SENATOR HARRIS of Georgia on Monday introduced a resolution for investigation of charges that federal appointments in the South are commonly bartered and sold by Republican national committeemen. This went to the judiciary committee, and Senator Ernst of Kentucky moved that the resolution be broadened to include similar charges against Democratic leaders and to inquire into the extent of the disfranchisement of Negroes in the South with a view to the enforcement of the Fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. This naturally didn't please the Democrats at all, and the matter was referred to a subcommittee.

THE case of Frank L. Smith of Illinois, appointed by Governor Small to fill out McKinley's unexpired term, kept the senate on tiptoe. Smith was presumed to have accepted the appointment, though he did not appear to present his credentials, and Democrats and Republicans alike, with some exceptions, were ready to throw him out when he should show up. Watson of Indiana, assistant Republican leader of the senate, said: "Smith can come down here if he likes, but in my opinion the senate will take summary action in his case and without delay." McNary of Oregon said: "There are too many votes against seating him ever to permit him to take the oath," and this was echoed by various others. Ashurst of Arizona declared he would call up his resolution disqualifying Smith as soon as his certificate of appointment was presented to the senate.

It is to avoid the possibility of an extra session of congress that the Republican leaders are lining up against Smith and in favor of an immediate vote on the Ashurst resolution without too much debate. Adoption of the resolution would send the whole matter to the Reed committee, taking it off the floor until supply bills and other important legislation can be disposed of.

SENATOR HEFLIN of Alabama broke loose Monday with a speech in which he repeated the old story that Jess W. Smith, confidant of Harry Daugherty when the latter was attorney general, did not commit suicide but was murdered. He asserted that Smith was slain to prevent exposure of a plan whereby Secretary of the Treasury Mellon was to be reimbursed for a loan of $5,000,000 to the Harding-Coolidge campaign fund by contributions forced from bootleggers and brewers. "Jess Smith knew so much that it was desired to get rid of him," declared Heflin. "We were conducting a general investigation of the whole thing. It was rumored, also, that Jess Smith grew exceedingly nervous over it and that he had made up his mind to make a clean breast of it all, but Jess never lived to make that clean breast. He died. He was murdered."

"Sounds like delirium to me," was Secretary Mellon's only comment when told of Senator Heflin's attack.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE let it be known that he will not approve appropriations for the construction of additional cruisers for the navy at this session of congress. This followed on the action of the house naval affairs committee in submitting formally the Butler bill authorizing the building of ten light cruisers with the unanimous recommendation that an appropriation be made at once for the completion of the three cruisers already authorized in the 1924 building program. It was stated at the White House that while acknowledging the need of more cruisers if the fleet is to be rounded out as a balanced unit in comparison with other major powers, the President feels the present naval construction bill is heavy enough for the American public to stand at this time. He is insistent that the present airplane carriers, the Lexington and the Saratoga, together with fleet submarines now building, should be completed before cruiser building is begun.

FIVE bills revising postal rates were passed by the house. One is for restoration of the one cent rate for private post cards; another authorizes transmission of business reply cards, the return postage of not more than two cents to be paid by the original mailer when the card is returned. A third bill amending the postal act would fix at one cent an ounce the rate on publications when mailed as second-class matter by others than the publisher or his agent. Another would provide for an additional charge on first-class matter mailed with insufficient postage.

EFFORTS of the house and senate conference committee to agree on legislation to regulate radio broadcasting were futile and the matter was deferred until January 4. If no agreement is reached next month the house conferees purpose to move the passage of an emergency resolution suspending the granting of broadcasting licenses pending regulatory legislation by the Seventieth congress.

REPRESENTATIVE BLACK of New York, author of a pending bill under which the United States would relinquish its extraterritorialty rights in China, sharply attacked the report of Silas H. Strawn on conditions there. He said Mr. Strawn's utterances since he returned from China have not only created a wrong impression here and in China as well, but have "worked irreparable harm to the American cause in China," and compelled President Coolidge to point out that they express merely Mr. Strawn's personal opinion and not the policy of the administration.

LITHUANIA'S Socialist government having been overthrown by the military and Catholic parties, that country now has a president-dictator in the person of Antona Smetona, former head of the republic. Professor Waldemaras is premier and foreign minister. Doctor Grenius, the ousted president, and several hundred Socialists and Communists were arrested. The radicals declare the parties of the right are influenced by England, which seeks to unite the Baltic states into a federation against Russia. Smetona says he is going to have the Lithuanian constitution revised and it and the country Americanized. The unofficial state of war with Poland continues.

AS WAS forecast last week, the German cabinet could not maintain its majority in the reichstag, therefore Chancellor Marx and his ministers submitted their resignations. These were accepted by President Von Hindenburg with the understanding that the cabinet would continue to function until after the new year.

Germany is about to get back a small piece of the vast colonial holdings she lost in the war. The council of ministers of Portugal has voted to return the territory south of the Rovuma river, known as the Kionga triangle, this being a part of the former German East Africa that was allotted to Portugal by the treaty of Versailles.

POPE PIUS, as an allocution in private consistory, made a strong attack on the Fascist state which has aroused much comment. The pontiff, while expressing thanks for the escape of Mussolini from assassination, dealt harshly with the duce's followers for depredations and deeds of violence against the persons and property of Catholics. The government refuses to be drawn into a controversy with the pope because, it says, the past acts he referred to have not been repeated in recent weeks and the orders of the government for the preservation of order have been severe.

NEITHER Brazil nor Argentina is said to like the plan which Secretary of State Kellogg suggested to end the Tacna-Arica dispute, and now it is understood Peru has offered an alternative scheme, which probably has no chance of acceptance by Chile or Bolivia. According to a La Paz paper, this is Peru's offer:

1. Peru will remain in possession of Tacna and the city of Arica, including Morro castle, which protects the harbor.

2. Peru and Chile, in common agreement, without demanding any pecuniary or territorial compensation, will cede to Bolivia all territory south of Tacna and Arica as far as the River Camarones.

3. Chile will retain possession of the Chilcaya nitrate field.

4. Bolivia will remain in possession of the port of Vitor, which is the only one that exists in that zone.

DELAYED for a day by foggy weather, the five United States army airplanes, New York, Detroit, San Francisco, San Antonio and St. Louis, began their pan-American tour Monday auspiciously. The start was from San Antonio, Texas, and the first jump took the planes to Laguna Madre, near Brownsville. Wednesday afternoon they took off for Tampico, with the intention of going thence to Vera Cruz and then to Mexico City for the Christmas holidays. The 20,000-mile tour will take the planes to scores of Central and South American cities and will last more than four months. Maj. H. A. Dargue commands the squadron, the other aviators being Capt. A. B. McDaniel, Capt. Ira C. Eaker, Capt. Clinton F. Woolsey, and Lieuts. B. S. Thompson, C. McK. Robinson, M. S. Fairchild, J. W. Benton and L. D. Weddington.

RELATIONS between the United States and Panama have not always been pleasant of late, but a newly signed treaty submitted to the senate for approval will improve them.

In one of its most important articles Panama agrees to consider herself in a state of war in case of a conflict in which the United States should be a belligerent.

Under this treaty, Panama agrees to co-operate with the United States in the protection and defense of the Panama canal. Complete control of radio and other communications, aircraft and aviation, transit of the canal, and other questions involved in the national defense is lodged with the United States.

Big Demand Abroad for American Foods

American foodstuffs, pushed by American salesmanship, have entered every country of the world.

A recent survey shows that "buyers' resistance" and the gastronomic prejudice of home-fed natives have capitulated to a tickled palate.

Japan and China smack their lips over steaming corned beef hash and canned sausage. India is growing sturdy on Columbia river salmon and California fruit. And Brazil keeps the American market swamped with demands for canned asparagus.

Not even tariff walls, which the European nations erected hastily after the armistice, have been greatly effective before the onslaught, export records show.

Salesmen in foreign countries generally adopt the same methods used in America, it is pointed out. It pays to advertise — anywhere. And canned milk with a Burmese label appeals just as strongly to the Asiatic fancy as the American label appeals here.

In most cases American goods are not competing with native goods. They are filling a demand they have themselves created.

Americans are demanding more and more European goods, importers say, while immigrants, conservative in adopting a new country's dishes, cling to their own cuisine. Hard sausage, black bread flour and strong cheese immigrants want, and there is a large import market in New York that caters to the demand.

SPORTS, AND BAD SPORTS

All with whom we have talked who were in Pasadena for the Stanford-Alabama football game seem to be unanimous in the declaration that the people of the south evinced an attitude which was unfriendly, if not actually hostile, toward the team from the California college. The majority of the crowd, in which people from the southern part of this state predominated, appeared to be on the side of the visitors from out the state at all times.

The only reason for the attitude of these people was that Stanford was not located in their particular part of the state, and rather that root for a college in a different part of the state, they would favor a team from some other state. It is too bad that a game as big and requiring sportsmanship such as football should be made the subject of such narrow-minded partisan smallness. Sports, we believe, should be big, openminded, clean. If interstate games are to become the subject of such warped sectionalism as displayed by some persons of the south, then they have failed in the one thing which differentiates a game from a mere contest of strength, sportsmanship.

THOS. PESKY DRAIN SPOUTS

We often wonder who was first responsible the idea of a drain spout which spouts with the least provocation and does it all over the sidewalk. With every rain these spouts pour torrents of rain from roofs of buildings, and having brought it to within a foot or eighteen inches of the sidewalks, discharge it with a whush all over the sidewalk and anyone who is passing. These spouts make the sidewalks look like rivers flowing sideways, and make the nervous pedestrian wonder whether to choose the swift flowing rivulet from the pipe or wade through the flowing gutters. Either process is disagreeable. It would seem to us that when planning a building, some provision could be made for carrying off the rain water from the roof without flushing it in a torrent across the sidewalk. We may be overburdened with laws, but since we have building ordinances now in effect, it might not be amiss if some provision to this effect were added to the present ordinance.

AN INDESTRUCTIBLE INDUSTRY

THE people of the Pacific Coast should exert themselves to co-operate with lumber companies in perpetuating the timber supply. Lumber is one of this section's greatest natural resources, but the time has arrived when man must help nature perpetuate it.

Most people think of lumber as being used principally for building houses; this is a mistaken idea. In a recent feature article in the Nation's Business, Frank G. Wisner, president of the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association, showed that while ten years ago but 2,000 uses of wood could be enumerated, today it is used in 4,500 different operations.

He enumerated so many different uses for wood that one almost forgets about it as a household material. Mr. Wisner's article showed that from shuttles and bobbins in the textile industry, to telegraph poles and railroad ties, no satisfactory substitute for wood has been found for these and many other industrial uses.

The Pacific Coast can grow many kinds of wood, and wood growing in this territory should be encouraged in every possible manner. Timber will bring new wood working industries. Concrete, steel and brick are natural building materials, which, because of fire hazards, will often be used in stead of frame construction; but even in building with these materials, large quantities of wood are required. The chemists are working to make wood slow-burning, and thus reduce fire haazrds.

The est can well afford to co-operate with its timber industry in its scientific program for perpetual timber supplies.

NEW LICENSE PLATES ADORN THOUSANDS OF CALIFORNIA MOTOR CARS

Thousands of the new maroon and cream colored license plates have made their appearance since renewal registration period Monthe opening of the motor vehicle day and thousands more are being issued daily from offices of the State Division of Motor Vehicles and 25 offices of the California State Automobile Association.

The sight of the distinctive 1927 plates with "California" spelled out below the numerals on the cars of fellow motorists on streets and highways should serve as a reminder to those who have not already complied with the law for another year that it is license time again, according to a statement today from the Automobile Association.

Motorists have until midnight of January 31 to make application for their 1927 pates, George S. Grant, manager of the Association Touring Bureau, declared. After that date, he pointed out, late comers will have to pay a penalty fixed by law of 100 per cent, a doubling of the $3 flat registration fee on passenger cars and the higher fees of trucks and other commercial vehicles.

Offices of the Division of Motor Vehicles in Sacramento, San Francisco, Oakland and Fresno did a rushing business during the first days of the re-registration period. Similar activity was reported by the Automobile Association at its San Francisco headquarters, 150 Van Ness avenue, and its 24 district offices issuing 1927 plates to its 70,000 members for passenger cars. By augmenting its clerical force for the re-registration work, the Association eliminated delays and waiting in line. Experts were on hand in all Association offices to assist members in forwarding applications to Sacramento for commercial vehicles registration or otherwise help motorists solve knotty problems in securing new license plates.

arning to motorists to destroy their old blue and white license plates as they are replaced with the new numerals was issued by the Association. In past years motor car thieves have made it a practice during the renewal registration period to use discard ed plates on stolen cars making it difficult for authorities to check up on thefts during this period. The Association also pointed out that the law requires that plates be securely fastened,a minimum of 16 inches from the ground and be clearly visible.

A nationally known geologist has just completed a report on the oil possibilities of the J. L. McCarthy ranch at Woodside. The geologist reports that after a six days investigation of the property that oil indications are numerous and that there is a strata of oil running through the property. His account is glowing and encouraging to the owner of the ranch.

BURLINGAME C. OF C. ASKS REAPPORTIONMENT

A reapportionment of representation on the board of supervisors was asked Monday when E. H. Warner of Burlingame appeared before the board of supervisors and stated that he was carrying on for the Burlingame Chamber of Commerce the work which was started by the late Barlow Ferguson, and which was interrupted by his death. Warner pointed on that at present the distribution of representation in very unequal. In fact, he stated, nearly half of the people of the county are represented by one representative on the board, Mrs. Brown, while the remainder of the voters elect four supervisors.

The remarks of Warner were born out by testimony offered by Sam Merk, proprietor of the Burlingame Advance-Star. Burlingame is under the disadvantage, Merk stated, of being divided between two townships. In the northern part of the city, the merchant who wishes to use the small claims court of his district must go six miles away to South San Francisco.

A tentative arrangement was suggested by the representative of the Burlingame body, by which the whole coaststide of the county would be placed in one township, while the eastern side of the county would be divided into four districts

This proposition, however, did not meet with the favor of Chairman MacBain, who stated that the only solution of the problem would be to divide the county into five districts, tranversly, each district taking in a portion of the coast.

The matter was finally taken under consideration by the board, and will be given a further hearing on January 17.

MOVIE HARDSHIPS AREN'T ALWAYS SEEN ON SCREEN

Bringing stories of hardships that would rival an explorer's diary, a Paramount company headed by Director John Waters, recently returned from a location trip in the Sierras. Ten days had been spent obtaining shots for "Man of the Forest," arriving next Monday and Tuesday, Jan. 10 and 11 at the Sequoia Theatre, on a Zane Grey story which Jack Holt, Georgia Hale and El Brendel bring to the screen playing leading roles.

Outside of chapped faces and hands, split lips and frost-bitten feet, none of the party suffered any serious results. Miss Hale, the only woman endured all discomforts without a word of complaint and was unanimously proclaimed a "dead game sport." Needless to say, the company in "Man of the Forest" worked at top speed to ensure a quick return to Hollywood.

The trip back and forth from town was an event in itself. From Mojave, the train folowed a branch line through desert county to Owenyo. At Owenyo a tortuous narrow-gauge, built to haul borax from Mina, Nevada, was boarded for a fifty mile trip on a dinky, old-fashioned coaches that appeared to be museum pieces.

At the end of that trip the company was still fifty miles from its contemplated headquarters and the last stretch was made by motor over narrow roads that climbed at one point four thousand feet in seven miles.

HE CATCHES DOGS, BUT HE DOESN'T SELL FISH

You can't buy fish from the pondman. Emphatically not. Every man should be a specialist, according to J. F. Nichois, Redwood City's official canine eradicator, and a man can't specialize in catching dags and selling fish at the same time.

Nichols sent a request to the board Monday evening asking that his dog catching wagon be plainly marked. "Redwood City Pound." This is necessary, Nichols sent word, because so many people mistake him for a vender of fish, that his work is impeeded by having to stop and explain that his only interest in fish would be a possible dog fish now and then.

The board decided that there was merit to Nichol's plaint, and that there was a decided resemblance between Redwood City's dog wagon and the vehicle of a fish hawker. It was ordered, therefore, that the necessary steps be taken to designate the dog wagon as a dog wagon, and end Nichols' difficulties. In the meantime housewives are urged not to call up the pound when planning their Friday dinner.

Cinema Satan Modern Worldly Sophisticate

GREEN LUCIFER NOT THE FAMILIAR "FAUST" OF PITCHFORK FAME

Satan was first represented in human form during the ninth century. This curious fact was recently brought to light by the Paramount Long Island Studio's Research Department.

The representation was on an ivory diptych of the time of Charles, the Bold.

Since then a long line of painters—Schongauer, Durer, Michelangelo, Titian, Raphael, Rubens, Rembrandt, Van Dyck, Breughel, Gustave Doré—and innumerable book illustrators and other artists have given their conceptions of the Prince of evil. Modern artists—Jean Rops, Max Klinger and Franz Stuck—have embodied the Evil One as a female. Victor Hugo thought the Devil to be a woman.

It was necessary to collect a wealth of data and paintings so that Director W Griffith could have something with which to work when production began on his version of Marie Corelli's book, "Sorrows of Satan," which comes to the Sequoia Theatre Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, December 12, 13 and 14.

Of his treatment of the story, Director Griffith follows Miss Corelli's description of Satan. He is pictured as a polished man of the world tempting those with whom he associates. But—In order to introduce Satan and make his motives clear it has been found necessary to go back to the legend of Lucifer's expulsion from Heaven.

Adolphe Menjou as Satan, Ricardo Cortez, Carol Dempster and Lya de Putti are featured in "Sorrows of Satan." John Russell and George Hull adapted the Corelli novel. Forrest Halsey scenarized it. "Sorrow of Satan," following "That Rayle Girl," is Griffith's second film for Paramount.

MUCH NEW HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION FOR SAN FRANCISCO BAY DISTRICT

The highway projects in the San Francisco Bay district and vicinity which are included in the list of seventy-nine new construction jobs proposed for construction during the biennium ending June 30, 1929, as included in the budget request submitted to Governor-elect C. C. Young, were announced this week by Chairman Harvey M. Toy of the highway commission.

To make this program possible, Toy said, new construction revenue must be provided.

The list for San Francisco and the Bay counties is as follows:

Skyline boulevard, La Honda road southerly San Mateo county, grading and surfacing, $620,000.

Four Projects on Bay Shore

Bayshore highway, San Francisco to South San Francisco, grading and surfacing, $650,000; Bayshore, South San Francisco to Broadway Station, surfacing $120,000; Bayshore, Broadway station to San Mateo, grading and surfacing, $180,000; Bayshore, San Mateo to Redwood City, grading and surfacing, $200,000.

Sargent railroad grade seperation, Santa Clara county, $50,000.

Gilroy to five miles easterly, grading and paving, $150,000 (Pacheco Pass lateral.)

San Ardo bridge across Salinas river, Monterey county, $300,000.

San Juan to Santa Rita via Dumbarton (to eliminate San Juan grade), Monterey county, $500,000.

Through Pinole, Hercules, Rodeo to Hercules, Contra Costa county, grading, paving, and structures on new routing, $250,000.

The work proposed, Toy pointed out, is all new construction and does not include projects included in the maintenance or reconstruction program, or convict camp operations. For the entire state, a program involving $10,000,000 a year, or $20,000,000 for the biennium, has been submitted to the incoming administration. Considering the state as a whole, it includes what the commission believes to be the most urgent projects now awaiting construction. It cannot be carried out, however, unless new revenue is provided.

SUPERVISORS ELEGT MACBAIN CHAIRMAN

Supervisor John MacBain of this district was again honored by election as chairman of the board of supervisors when that body met for reorganization Monday. The election of MacBain as chairman placed the board in the same relations as before, as both the supervisors whose terms expired Monday were returned at the election in November. The two elected were Rosalie M. Brown of the Second district and Dr. C. V. Thompson of Pescadero.

The motion that Supervisor MacBain be re-elected chairman was made by Supervisor Thompson and seconded by Supervisor Brown. Upon rollcall it was given the unanimous approval of the board.

Supervisor MacBain was visably affected by the confidence shown in him by the other members of the board, and in thanking those who had selected him as their chairman, he promised to conduct the office to the best of his ability as he had done in the past.

MacBain is the pioneer member of the board, having been a member of that body for 22 years. He is now serving his fourth consecutive term.

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD FOR MRS. GLADYS JOY

Funeral services were held Monday for Mrs. Gladys Joy of San Carlos, who passed away Saturday night after an illness of several months at the Lane hospital in San Francisco. Services were held from the parlors of the James Crowe Co. and were conducted by the Christian Scientist church. Mrs Steinberg of La Honda conducted the ceremonies. The funeral was attended by a great many friends of the young woman and of her bereaved family. Interment was in Cypress Lawn cemetery.

Mrs. Joy was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Effort Urch of San Carlos and the wife of Glenwood Joy of the same city. She had been married less than a year. Besides her husband, Mrs. Joy is survived by her parents and by the following brothers and sisters, Paul Urch of San Carlos; Everett E. Warren and Harry Urch of Oakland, Mrs. Howard Towle of Vallejo; Mrs. Earl Harris of Colorado; and Mrs. A. W. Russel of this city.

LOCAL GIRL IN NARROW ESCAPE

Miss Helen Lyons of this city had a narrow escape from death beneath the wheels of a passenger train at the San Mateo station Wednesday, when she fell from the steps of a north bound train, almost onto the track of an approaching train from the north. Miss Lyons is thought to have fallen in a faint, and fell upon the cement walk between the two train tracks, and rolled to within a foot of the other track, just as the train passed. Witness to the near tradegy stood spell bound expecting to see the girl ground beneath the wheels of the engine.

The prostrate form of the girl was hurried to the Mills Memorial hospital, where it was found that she had suffered a slight concussion of the brain and several bad bruises. Her condition is not serious, however.

Miss Lyons is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Lyons of 113 Roosevelt avenue. She is a student at the San Mateo Junior College, and was on her way to that place when the accident occured.

The Road

EVERY one was glad when the new section of the road was built. All realized that personal visits could be made more easily, that trade would be brisker, that matters of general public interest would be carried on with more efficiency and dispatch.

The telephone road, that already enables every one to travel so easily, so cheaply and so far, is constantly being lengthened. Each year over 800,000 telephones are added to the Bell System. Every subscriber shares in the increased value given to telephone service by this extension which hourly is enlarging the scope of every one's activities by permitting an ever broadening interchange of ideas.

LOCAL DOG WINS CHAMPIONSHIP

Tara Warrior, a noted greyhound owned by Thomas Tuite of this city, won the Christmas championship in stakes at the coursing park at San Pablo last Sunday. The dog was brought over from Ireland by Mr. Tuite last August. The dog was bred near the famous hills of Tara, where St. Patrick Christianized the Irish of Ireland long ago. It was on the topmost hill of this place that Patrick made use of the three leaf shamrock in explaining the meaning of the Blessed Trinity. Mr. Tuite has been offered a fancy figure for the greyhound but he spurns the offer believing that the hound is capable of securing national honors and stakes Tara Warrior is twenty months old and a thoroughbred, his ancestors having won ribobns in the old land.

She shook her head. "It isn't that," she sobbed at last.

"Then what is it?"

"I've brought you here. And—I—I think it was a horrible thing to do. I—I can't forgive myself."

Laurie groped vaguely amidst sensations of relief and the mental confusion with which, someway, she always filled him.

"You're—all right, aren't you? And you expected me, didn't you?"

"Yes, but— Oh, don't make me talk! Let me cry."

She was crying as she spoke, rackingly, and every sob tore his heart. Again, as so often before, he felt dazed and helpless before the puzzle she presented. Yet, as always, there seemed nothing to do but obey her, since she, and not he, invariably held the key to the strange situations in which she placed him. Her tears made him feel desperate, yet he dared not continue to hold her hands, and he did not know what to say. Rising, but keeping his position beside her, he waited for her to grow calmer, and as he waited he subconsciously took in the room.

It was a big front chamber, furnished as a sitting-room. Its broad windows, with their cushioned window-seats, faced east. Besides the window, it had two exits, the door by which he had entered, and another door, half open, apparently leading into a bedroom. Its comfortable easy-chairs were covered with gay chintz, its curtains were of the same material, its reading-table held books and newspapers, and in its big open fireplace fat logs were blazing. Shaw "did" his prisoners well. Laurie remembered the cigarettes, matches and blankets so thoughtfully provided for himself. Like Shaw's own room, the chamber breathed simple comfort. It was impossible to take in the thought of anything sinister in connection with it until one observed the gagged woman in the corner, and remembered the locked door.

"Well, princess," he said at last, still trying to speak lightly, "th's isn't much of a donjon tower, is it?"

Her sobs, hysterical and due to overwrought nerves, had given place to occasional sharp catches of the breath, like those uttered by a little child whose "crying spell" is almost over. She did not speak, but put out her hand to him, and he took it and held it closely, conscious of a deep thrill as the small palm touched his.

"I want to talk to you," he said gently, "but I'd feel a lot more comfortable if our chaperon were a little more remote. Can we put her into this inner room?"

Doris nodded, and he waved the woman across the threshold of the bedroom. She would be safe there. He had observed that the windows of the inner room were still barred and shuttered. Seemingly, in all the big house, this upstairs sitting-room alone had opened its heart to the sun.

"Are you really alone in the house?" he asked.

"Yes; I think so; I'm almost sure of it."

"Then there's no mad rush about leaving?"

"No—I—I think not."

He observed her hesitation but ignored it. He drew two big chairs close to the open fire, and, leading Doris to one, seated her in it, and took the other himself, turning it to face hers. As he did so, she recoiled.

"You look so dreadful!" she explained with a shudder.

"I suppose I do. But forget that and tell me something. When did Shaw leave?"

"Within half an hour of the time he brought me here."

"When is he coming back?"

"Tonight, I think."

"And he's left you here alone, with no one around but this woman?" Laurie asked, incredulously. Here was another situation hard to understand.

"His secretary is somewhere around, a wretched jackal that does what he's told."

"Oh!" This was news. "Where is he?"

"Out in the garage. He has a room there. I heard him say he had no sleep last night, and that he expected to get some today."

Laurie rose.

"I'll take a look around and see where he is," he suggested. "We can't have him catching on to my little visit and telephoning to Shaw, you know."

As he spoke he was walking toward the door that led into the hall, and now he confidently put out his hand and turned the knob. His expression changed. He gave the knob a violent twist, then, setting his shoulder against the jamb, tried to wrench the door open. It did not yield. Doris watching him wide-eyed, was the first to speak.

"Locked?" she whispered.

"Locked," corroborated Laurie. He nodded thoughtfully. Several things, small in themselves, which had puzzled him, were clearing up. Among others, the housekeeper's persistent efforts to gain time were now explained. Shaw had not been so careless as he had seemed. The meek blond secretary with the pursuing eyes and the chloroforming habit was certainly in the house.

CHAPTER XIII

Laurie Checks a Revelation

Laurie shook his head.

"That was rather stupid of him," he remarked, mildly. "It's almost as easy to force open a locked door from the inside as from the outside."

"I know." Doris was again breathless. "But in the meantime he's telephoning to Shaw."

"I don't think so." Laurie, his hands in his pockets, was making a characteristic turn around the room. "What has he to gain by telephoning? Shaw's coming back anyway in a few hours; and in the meantime the secretary has got me safely pocketed, or thinks he has. I have an idea he'll stand pat. You see, he doesn't know about my talent for opening locked doors."

He strolled back to the door as he spoke and examined the lock. Then, appreciatively, he drew from his pocket the screw-driver he had thoughtfully brought from the garage.

"I fancied this might be useful. It will take me just about four minutes to open that door," he announced. "So get on your things and be ready to start in a hurry."

"Do you imagine that we can get away now, in broad daylight?" She seemed dazed by the suggestion.

"Why not? You want to get out of here, don't you?"

"Yes—I—of course I do!"

"You don't seem very sure of it."

Laurie was smiling down at her with his hands still in his pockets, but there was an expression keen, cold, almost but not quite suspicious.

"Yes, but—you don't understand. Shaw has other men on watch, two of them."

"Where?"

"In the grounds. One in the front and the other in the back."

The newcomer mentally digested this unwelcome information.

"If we wait till it's dark," said the girl, "we'll have a better chance."

"Unless Shaw gets back in the meantime." He was still watching her with that new look in his eyes. Then, briskly, he returned to his interest in the doorlock.

"In any case," he casually remarked, "we don't want to be jailed here."

She said no more, but sat watching him as he worked, deftly and silently. In little more than the time he had predicted he opened the door and held it wide.

"Any time you would like to pass out," he invited, then checked himself and vanished in the dimness of the hall. The girl left behind heard the sounds of running feet, of a sharp scuffle, of a few words spoken in a high, excited voice. Then Laurie reentered the room, pushing the secretary before him. At present the youth looked anything but meek. His blond hair was on end, his tie was under one ear, his pale eyes were bright with anger, and he moved spasmodically, propelled by jerks from behind.

Laurie Entered the Room, Pushing the Secretary Before Him.

"I don't like this young man," said Laurie, conversationally. "I never have. So I'm going to put him where for a few hours he can't annoy us. Is there a good roomy closet on this floor? If there is, kindly lead us to it."

"Say, hold on!" cried the blond youth, in outraged tones. "I'm sick of this."

"Shut up." Laurie shook him gently. "And cheer up. You're going to have a change. Lead on, please."

Thus urged, and further impelled, the secretary obediently led the way to a closet at the far end of the upper hall. It was fairly commodious, and full of garments hanging on pegs and smelling oppressively of camphor. It afforded an electric-light fixture, and Laurie, switching on the light, emphasized this advantage to the reluctant new occupant, who unwisely put up a brief and losing fight on its threshold.

"You may read if you like," Laurie affably suggested, when this had been suppressed. "I'll bring you some magazines. You may even smoke. Mr. Shaw and I always treat our prisoners with the utmost courtesy. You don't smoke? Excellent! Safer for the closet, and a fine stand for a worthy young man to take. Now, I'll get the magazines for you."

He did so, and the blond secretary accepted them with a black scowl.

"I'm afraid," observed Laurie regretfully, "he has an ungrateful nature."

He locked the door on the infuriated youth, pocketed the key, and faced Doris, who had followed the brief procession. The little encounter had restored his poise.

"What next?" he asked, placidly.

Her reply was in the nature of a shock.

"I'd like to have you wash up."

He raised his eyebrows.

"And spoil my admirable d guise? However, if you insist, I suppose I can get most of the effect again with ashes, if I have to. Where's a bathroom?"

She indicated a door, and returned to her room. He made his ablutions slowly and very thoughtfully. There were elements in this new twist of the situation which did not tally with any of his former hypotheses. Doris, too, was doing some thinking on her own account. When he returned to the sitting-room she wore the air of one who has pondered deeply and has come to a conclusion.

"What do your friends call you?" she abruptly asked.

"All kinds of things," admitted the young man. "I wouldn't dare to repeat some of them." Under the thoughtful regard of her red-brown eyes his manner changed. "My sister calls me Laurie," he added soberly.

"May I?"

"By all means, if you'll promise not to be a sister to me."

"Then—Laurie—"

"I like that," he interrupted.

"So do I. Laurie—I—I'm going to tell you something."

"Yes?" he said.

"Please smoke." Again she was playing for time. "And—and don't look at me," she added, almost harshly. "I—I think I can get it out better if you don't."

His answer was to swing his chair around beside hers, facing the blazing logs, and to take out his case and light a cigarette.

"I'm going to tell you everything," she said in a low tone.

"I'm glad of that."

"I know," she muttered, almost inaudibly. "It's all—horrible. It's infinitely worse than you suspect. And that's why I'm going to tell you the truth, big as the cost may be to me."

"Wait a minute," he interrupted. "Let's get this straight. You're telling me, aren't you, that any revelation you make now will react on you. Is that it?"

"Yes."

"You will be the chief sufferer by it?"

"Yes."

"Will it help you any to have me understand? Will it straighten out the trouble you're in?"

She considered her answer.

"The only help it will give me will be to know that you do understand," she said at last; "to know that—that—you're not suspecting things about me."

"And it will make things hard for you, otherwise, to have me know?" he persisted.

"Yes." This time her answer was prompt. "It will end everything I am trying to do, and destroy what I have already done."

Laurie threw his half-burned cigarette into the fire, as if to lend greater emphasis to his next words.

"That settles it," he announced. "I won't listen to you."

She turned to look at him.

"But you must," she faltered. "I'm all ready to tell you. I've been working myself up to it ever since you came."

"I know. I've watched the process, and I won't have another word." He lit a second cigarette, drew in a mouthful of smoke, and sent it forth again in a series of widening rings. "Your conversation is extremely uninteresting," he explained; "and look at the setting we've got for something romantic and worth while. This cozy room, this roaring fire"—he interrupted himself to glance through the nearest window—"a ripping old snowstorm outside, that's getting worse every minute, and the exhilarating sense that though we're prisoners, we've already taken two perfectly good prisoners of our own; what more could one ask to make an afternoon in the country really pleasant?"

He stopped, for she was crying again, and the sight, which had taxed his strength an hour earlier, overtaxed it now. She overwhelmed him like a breaker. He rose, and going close to her, knelt beside her chair.

"Doris," he begged, brokenly. "Don't, don't cry! I can't tell you how it makes me feel. I—I can stand anything but that." He seized her hands and tried to pull them away from her face. "Look at me," he urged. "I've got all sorts of things to say to you, but I won't say them now. This isn't the time or the place. But one thing, at least, I want you to know. I do trust you. I trust you absolutely. And whatever happens, whatever all this incredible tangle may mean, I shall always trust you."

She wiped her eyes and looked into his, more serious in that moment than she had ever seen them.

"I will stop," she promised, with a little catch in her voice. "But please dont think I'm a hysterical fool. I'm not crying because I'm frightened, but because—because—Laurie, you're so splendid!"

"I told you you'd find all sorts of unexpected virtues in me," he lightly announced; and it was the familiar Laurie who smiled down at her. "There are dozens more you don't dream of. I'll reveal them to you guardedly. They're rather overwhelming."

She smiled vaguely at his chatter, but it was plain that she was following her own thoughts.

"The most wonderful thing about you," she said, "is that through this whole experience you've never, for one single instant, been 'heroic.' You're not the kind to 'emote'!"

"Great Scott!" gasped Laurie, startled. "I should hope not!"

He could look at her now, and he did, his heart filled with the satisfying beauty of her. She was still leaning forward a little in the low chair, with her hands unconventionally clasped around one knee, and her eyes staring into the fire. A painter, he reflected, would go mad over the picture she made; and why not? He himself was going mad over it, was even a little light-headed.

She wore again the gown she had worn the first day he saw her, and the memory of that poignant hour intensified the emotion of this one. Taking her in, from the superb masses of hair on her small head to the glittering buckles on her low house-shoes, Laurie knew at last that whoever and whatever this girl might be, she was the one whose companionship through life his hungry heart demanded. He loved her. He would trust her, blindly if he must, but whatever happened fully and for all time.

HOME-SEWING TIME IS NEAR; GORGEOUS EVENING WRAPS

YES, the time has come to plan for spring sewing. Now that all the holiday decorations are packed away for another season, the "thank yous" all written, the children back at school, too early for golf, too late for grand opera, what to do but sew, sew, sew! Surely all signs are propitious for a January sewing bee.

House frocks to make, a supply of dresses for the kiddies, draperies for the windows—let's study up "what's new" in spring wash goods. Notebook handy? Might want to jot down a few items for reference.

For one thing, write as an opening notation that prints are outstanding for spring. Quaint chintz patterns and grandmother prints, printed sateens, and especially printed batistes and dimities. "They say" small figures will predominate, especially on the heavier weaves, though peering into the far future one sees big-flowered organdies.

A Simple House Frock.

Fabrics on the order of pongee, also English cotton reps and Scotch madras are favored for washable daytime frocks, likewise rayon mixtures.

Competing with the new prints is broadcloth in a range of delectable plain colors. This is an ideal fabric for sports and simple daytime frocks, for it launders perfectly. There are also printed broadcloths to be had. These, with novelty rayons, show mostly small patternings.

As to styling, the trend is toward something clever and "different" from the some-time-ago popular bungalow apron effect. There is a decided favor expressed for short sleeves. Some of the newest spring models introduce the bolero—if not actually, at least simulating it. Pockets are made much of, following the inspiration, no doubt, of winter styles.

It is "pockets" which give to this dress of sateen print which you see in the picture a note of individuality.

Evening wraps are reveling in a veritable orgy of gorgeousness. It seems as if elaborateness cannot be carried too far to please women of smart fashion. "Temperance in all things"—except the formal coat or cape, which may carry to excess color, fur and novelty handstitching without transgressing the law of fashion.

The wrappy coat which swathes the figure is perhaps the favorite. Often it introduces a draped treatment, after the manner of the model in this picture. Superb turquoise blue velvet is the chosen medium for this exquisite wrap. It is embroidered over the hips with silver spangles and stars over a rosy silver cloth. Of course it is smartly befurred, for most of the evening wraps are. In this instance luxurious silver gray fox is the preferred trimming.

There is spirited rivalry between velvet, brocade and metal cloth for the formal wrap. When velvet is used it is in some gloriously illuminative shade, lavishly furred, shirred, draped and embroidered.

As to metal brocade, it fairly effervesces with what might be called jewel colorings, for theirs is the red of the ruby, the yellow of the topaz, the green of the emerald, the purple of the amethyst reflected amid the glint of gold and silver weave. Quite often huge collars of shirred velvet usurp the place of furs on the gorgeous brocade wrap.

Elaborate Formal Wrap.

Charming for young girls are semi-wrappy coats styled either of cloth-of-silver or cloth-of-gold. Collars and cuffs of white rabbit emphasize their youthfulness.

Recent arrivals from Paris embody many decorative ideas which give promise of a continuance of elaborateness throughout the styling of evening wraps.

Silver Spring

IN CERTAIN sections of Florida there is an underground layer of limestone. Beneath this rock-sheet a number of rivers, of whose presence there is no surface indication, busily work their way toward the sea.

Breaks or other openings in this stratum of stone enable some of these streams to burst through and come to the surface, which they do with a suddenness that is astonishing, in the form of great fountains or springs—producing a strange spectacle as unusual in character as it is beautiful to behold.

Perhaps the most prominent of these springs is Silver spring—in Marion county, a few miles from the town of Ocala—the basin of which is several acres in extent.

The water contains sufficient lime to settle any substance which might be carried in solution and is so perfectly clear that the bottom—80 feet down in one place—is distinctly visible.

Seen in any light at any time of day or year, this great basin of bubbling, crystal-clear water is a fascinating sight. It is seen to best advantage, however, when a slight breeze whips the surface into a succession of dancing ripples and the sunshine illumines those ripples, investing them with all the colors of the rainbow. The sight thus produced is one of rare and enchanting beauty.

The overflow of this spring is carried off by a stream which flows into the Ocklawaha river—a tropical stream which meanders through tangled, vine-hung growths to join the greater St. Johns river.

Chicago's New Water Tunnel

THE completion of a new water tunnel under a portion of Chicago discloses some enlightening information concerning the tremendous size and amazing cost of such undertakings in large cities.

Constructed in order that some 600,000 persons residing in the southwestern part of the city might "drink copiously and have more water for Saturday night," this tunnel is horseshoe in shape, lined with concrete to cover all jagged projections and remove all resistance to water flow, has a finished diameter of 12 feet, is 6 1-3 miles long—all in solid rock, and, in the main, 140 feet below the surface of the streets.

According to the city engineer, approximately 1,400,000 pounds of dynamite were used in blasting, 400,000 cars of rock excavated and elevated to the surface and 500,000 bags of cement used in lining the tunnel.

The work in the tunnel was carried on from two shafts—each plant, electrically operated, consisting of headhouse, power house, dry room, storeroom, office, blacksmith shop, cement shed, carpenter shop, rock crusher and storage bins.

The capacity of this tunnel is 300,000,000 gallons per twenty-four hours. The total cost, including the shafts and equipment, was about $131 per foot, or $4,500,000 all told.

The pumping station is equipped with four compound turbine-driven pumps, each with a capacity of 75,000,000 gallons per twenty-four hours, and cost an additional $2,500,000.

El Capitan

ASCENDING the rugged canyon of the Merced river to the lovely valley of the Yosemite in California, one comes upon a colossal hunk of granite—plain, stern, challenging, and of such staggering proportions as to cause suspicion concerning the correctness of his vision.

This is El Capitan—the word a probable derivation or corruption of the Indian name "Tu-tock-ah-nu-lah"—said to be the largest, loftiest, mightiest, most glorious rock in creation.

The significance of this statement is apparent when one understands that the almost-perpendicular face of this stupendous pile rises 3,600 feet, or nearly three-quarters of a mile, toward the blue sky above from the water in the tiny river at its base, while its two side walls have an area of between three and four hundred acres.

Opinion differs concerning its origin. Great floods rushing down the valley for long periods when the Sierra Nevada mountains were in the making may have scoured away the dirt and debris and left this immovable rock. Again, a glacier of untold size and age may have ground its way down this valley, destroying everything in its path save this indestructible giant. Or the bottom of the valley may have been sunk by an earthquake.

The impression which this monster rock makes upon one varies with the moods of the weather. A pale moonlight gives to it an almost ghostly outline of overwhelming immensity with a somewhat spooky personality.

The "Blues" a Habit

If you have fits of depression, sometimes called "blues," you are to blame. Feeling blue is a habit, a psychological sharp tells us. Blues are caused by thinking the wrong way. The blue way is, "It's bound to get worse." It is almost impossible for a busy person to be blue. Possibly that suggests the cure.—Cappers Weekly.

Marquette's Map Into Court

FATHER HENNEPIN'S MAP, 1690

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THEY turned back the pages of history more than 250 years in Washington the other day. And there was drama in the scene, too, even though a United States Supreme court chancery hearing is about the last place on earth you'd expect to see drama enacted. But this was an unusual court case and the fact that the actors in it are of nation-wide interest if for no other reason would make it noteworthy.

For this was the Great Lakes level controversy in which the plaintiffs are the sovereign states of Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York. The defendants are the equally sovereign states of Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi and Illinois, and more especially city officials of the metropolis of the Middle West in the person of the Chicago sanitary district commissioners. The judge was Charles Evans Hughes, erstwhile governor of New York, Republican presidential candidate, secretary of state, Supreme court justice and United States senator, who acted as special master for the Supreme court in hearing evidence in the case. And the chief of counsel for the complainants was Newton D. Baker, who was secretary of war in the Wilson cabinet.

Add to these, lawyers and college professors of national renown and you have the stage set for the great court scene in this drama. Outstanding among these was Dr. James W. Goldthwait, professor of geology in Dartmouth college and a former instructor at Northwestern university, who, as a complainants' witness, produced the historic "Exhibit A" which bridged the gap of two centuries and a half between the time of the French explorers, when most of the American continent was still a wilderness, and these modern days when the radio made the man in Maine next-door neighbor to the man in Washington. For this "Exhibit A" was a map drawn by Father Marquette in his explorations of the Illinois headwaters in 1673 which was among the hundreds of maps introduced into the evidence and which may prove a decisive factor in the controversy.

The hundreds of maps which have been introduced into the evidence are only a small part of it, for the record in this controversy, which goes back to the opening of the old Illinois-Michigan canal in 1865, has been growing faster and in greater bulk than the proverbial snowball rolling down the longest hill in the world. Already more than 1,000,000 words of evidence have been put into the record and the case has barely begun! The complaintiffs, only, have been heard from and the defendants are yet to have their innings when the hearings are resumed on January 10.

The case, which opened early in November and continued into December when an adjournment was taken, hinges upon the diversion of water from the Great Lakes by the city of Chicago as an aid in sewage disposal. It was for the purpose of having legal proof in the record that such a diversion does exist that Marquette's and other historic maps were introduced into the evidence. So when Doctor Goldthwait, an almost white-haired, middle-aged scholar who has searched college libraries, the archives of the war department, the library of congress and the journals of early explorers and examined hundreds of maps made by other cartographers who followed the Jesuit priest, came before Master Hughes as an expert witness, it was his testimony which turned back the pages of history to an almost forgotten era.

NEW MARQUETTE MONUMENT IN CHICAGO

Doctor Goldthwait admitted that Father Marquette's map shows a continuing line running from the Des Plaines river, which empties into the Illinois, to the Chicago river, which originally flowed into Lake Michigan, thus indicating that the Jesuit explorer had made his canoe journey by water without a portage and that there was a continuous flow of water from the Des Plaines to the lake. But this is the only map which does show such a water communication. All others, according to Doctor Goldthwait, reveal a natural divide between the headwaters of the two rivers, along the line of what is now Kedzie avenue, Chicago. The point is considered vital, for one of the chief contentions of the plaintiffs is that the artificial drainage canal, which reversed the flow of the Chicago river and made it famous as "the only river that flows uphill," joined the two great continental river systems, the Mississippi and the St. Lawrence, over a natural barrier, the line of the present Kedzie avenue, which Professor Goldthwait characterized as a "continental divide."

He asserted that from time immemorial the flood waters of the Des Plaines river had at various times overflowed and run off into Lake Michigan. He stated that naturally the waters of the Chicago and Calumet rivers would flow into Lake Michigan, but that artificial changes had reversed the currents and not only caused waters that should have flowed into Lake Michigan to be diverted into the Mississippi water shed but had diverted water from Lake Michigan itself.

The complainants in this case seek to enjoin the Chicago sanitary district from withdrawing water in such quantities as, according to their statement, impairs lake shipping through lowering of the normal surface level. They have centered their argument upon two points—that the sanitary district has burdened the population of downstate Illinois and adjoining territory in the Mississippi basin with polluted water and that adequate artificial sewage disposal plants would make unnecessary withdrawal of water sufficient to constitute a burden on Great Lakes shipping.

When the defendants take the stand, with Chicago as their chief proponent, it is expected that they will not deny that an actual diversion of water exists, but they will deny that this diversion has done any real injury to other lake states. They probably will argue that the level of the lakes is dependent upon cycles of rainfall, that it was lower in 1895 than in 1925 and that the decrease in recent years is due to lessened precipitation, not to the Chicago drainage canal.

Whether or not the Marquette map will be the decisive factor in the case, as it has been said that it may be, remains to be seen after the defense has completed its estimated two weeks of testimony and argument, and Mr. Hughes has submitted the record, together with a digest of the law involved and his recommendations to the Supreme court. If perchance Father Marquette's map does prove to be a decisive factor in deciding the case in favor of the defendants, Chicago and the Middle West will have all the more reason for holding his memory in grateful reverence.

This Jesuit priest, who with his companion, Joliet, the fur trader, came to the Illinois country in 1673 and who was one of the first, if not the very first white man to visit the present site of Chicago, is one of the best-loved heroes of the Middle West. His name appears in dozens of places on the maps of Middle Western states; it is perpetuated in schools and other structures, in roads, streets, towns, cities and counties. Chicago, particularly, has delighted to honor him. Only last summer a new Marquette monument (shown above) was unveiled in Chicago. It stands opposite the Harrison Technical high school so that the three figures, Pere Marquette, Joliet and an Indian guide, the pioneers, may be a constant inspiration to the citizens of the future.

Too Thick

The bobbed-haired flapper had been arrested for making fifty on one of the main thoroughfares of a Vermont town.

"What was the big idea of burning up your roads like that?" demanded the judge sternly.

"Well, you see, judge, I was hurrying home to help mother with the dishes," she replied demurely.

"Huh," growled the judge, "you get a year in jail and a fine of $1,000 for perjury. We would have overlooked the speeding, but perjury will not be tolerated in New England, you can bet on that!"

Coloring Lantern Slides

Aniline colors may be used to color lantern slides, these acting more as stains than colors. The better-class workers use oil colors in tubes, care being taken to employ only those that show their true tint when viewed by transmitted light. The most useful are gamboge, Italian pink (yellow), burnt and raw sienna, Prussian blue, crimson lake and red madder. Thin with copal varnish.

Real Diversified Farming

The theory of diversified crops had a tuning at Wakefield, Kan. Eugene Elkins and Percy Walters demonstrated variety on the farm when they exhibited at the fall show. Mr. Elkins showed 118 products, all produced on his 80-acre farm. They included fruits, vegetables, berries, hays, grasses and grains. Mr. Walters grew 60 varieties of fruit, vegetables and flowers on a 47-acre tract.—Indianapolis News.

Fate Against Him

The radio is a great invention, but there is one certain young man about town who has doubt about it. He had bought his best girl a radio set on the dollar down and dollar-a-week plan, without telling her he had bought it on time. But the collector made a bad mistake. Instead of calling on the boy for the first payment he called on the girl. The call was made at a most inopportune time, when the girl friend was showing the set to some of her friends. She sent the radio back to the store and gave her boy friend the air.—Columbus Dispatch.

New Affliction

FARM POULTRY

RIGHT CARE AND FEED FOR EGGS

In the summer the farm hen may forage for a supply of animal feed and garner all the available bugs, worms, and green feed needed to replenish worn-out body tissue and to produce an abundant quantity of eggs. But winter has come now and the bugs are gone. So has the green feed on many farms and the hen must be fed if she is expected to produce eggs in profitable quantities.

"Eggs are high-priced in the winter because so few farm hens are laying at this season," says Dr. B. F. Kaupp, head of the poultry department at South Carolina State college. "The two usual reasons for low egg production are found in the poor producing power of the hen and also because she may not have the proper food and care. If the hen comes from a high producing strain and is not laying as she should, it is possible that she may not have a comfortable house, or that she is not free of parasites, and does not have the right kind of feed and other care."

Doctor Kaupp states that eggs are low in price during the spring months because everybody's hens are laying then. Eggs always go down in the spring and the farmers' organizations should store eggs at that season. In the winter eggs go up to 75 cents and $1 per dozen because the hens are not laying. Then the storage houses bring out the cheap spring eggs to sell at a good profit.

The poultry department has prepared extension circulars 155, 156 and 158 which tell how to put the farm flock on a paying basis. These bulletins are free and will tell how to cull and feed the birds for winter eggs. It should be remembered, states Doctor Kaupp, that laying hens must have mash before them at all times. The mash must contain crushed grains, minerals, fish or meat meal, or the surplus milk of the farm. Tender, green feed is also needed each day. Water should be constantly before the birds and the grain feed given them twice each day.

Most Poultry Diseases Can Easily Be Conquered

A broom, shovel, scraper and a spray pump with some crude oil or other good spray material will conquer most poultry diseases. The University of Nebraska lists these remedies as the best for most poultry diseases. Unfortunately, they also require energy and initiative on the part of the flock owner. It is much easier to put pills or dope in the drinking water after the hens are sick than it is to scald the fountains and clean up the house.

Of course, poultry yields to treatment the same as other live stock but why allow sickness to gain a foothold in the first place? Furthermore, the fellow who pins too much faith on bright-colored, strong-smelling medicines usually forgets to remove the cause of the trouble. A little study usually proves it to be over-crowding, poor ventilation, filth and vermin. Disease will cure the overcrowding, but it is an expensive method. Just plain prevention is all most poultry raisers need to avoid losses.

Profits Increased From Hens by Use of Lights

Tests at the Nebraska experiment station last winter on two pens of 90 leghorns each showed that electric lights increased the income from 90 hens $25.44. The hens in both lots were as near alike as possible and both groups were kept in ordinary houses.

Both pens received exactly the same care except that one was lighted at 5 o'clock each morning and the other was not. Pullets well matured and ready to lay by November 1 respond to lights all winter. Yearling hens that have molted late should not be forced before January 1. Morning light proved more practical from the standpoint of feed and management. Scratch feed was scattered in the litter at night so the hens could go to work in the morning as soon as an alarm turned on the lights.

Breeding Pens

Although the average poultry man cannot afford to trapnest his hens, he can greatly improve his flock by making a special breeding pen of his best male bird and a few choice hens or pullets. In choosing these breeders both egg producing and standard qualities should be kept in mind. By toe-marking or banding chicks hatched from this pen it will be found that the chicks hatched from the eggs from this pen will be superior to those from the general flock.

Dry Mash for Hens

The amount of dry mash that the hens eat is usually determined by the amount of scratch feed given to the flock. Satisfactory results are obtained by feeding twice as much scratch feed as mash during the winter months, the ratio being reversed during the summer and spring months. It is a good plan to give the heaviest feed late in the afternoon. Succulent feeds like alfalfa, clover, sprouted oats, etc., are rich in vitamines, and have an excellent effect on the digestive system.

Pay It With Pullets

"Pay it with pullets" is the slogan of farm boys and girls of Tennessee who returned 1,910 standard bred pullets to the bankers who supplied them with eggs last spring on the "Return a pullet" payment plan. The boys and girls are members of poultry clubs conducted by extension workers cooperatively employed by the United States Department of Agriculture and the state agricultural college. These pullets will be sold by the bankers to interest the farmers in better poultry.

Quart of Water Cleans Kidneys

Take a Little Salts If Your Back Hurts, or Bladder Is Troubling You

No man or woman can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Eating too much rich food creates acids, which excite the kidneys. They become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood. Then we get sick. Rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders often come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys, or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, begin drinking a quart of water each day, also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys may act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush and stimulate the kidneys; also to help neutralize the acids in the system, so they no longer cause irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby often avoiding serious kidney complications.

Their Value

"Fools have their uses," said old Festus Pester. "They are excellent for the purpose of teaching the rest of us the disastrous results of blowing into unloaded shotguns, trying to beat the other feller at his own game, buying old stock, skating on thin ice, indorsing notes for friends of our boyhood, flirting with charming grass widders, and so on and so forth."—Kansas City Star.

"DANDELION BUTTER COLOR"

A harmless vegetable butter color used by millions for 50 years. Drug stores and general stores sell bottles of "Dandelion" for 35 cents.—Adv.

Whale Becoming Extinct

Complete extermination of the whale within five or ten years is predicted, unless the wholesale butchery of this valuable mammal can be stopped by international law. It is said that not more than 12,000 whales are left in the world, and that the whaling industry is literally slaughtering in excess of 2,000 each year.—Thrift Magazine.

Governor Gunderson of South Dakota was condemning the profiteer.

"The Italians," he said, "have a proverb that fits the profiteer like a glove. It runs:

"'The man capable of growing rich in a year should be hanged twelve months beforehand.'"

When Winter Comes

Good Elimination Is Essential

HABITS of life change with the changing seasons. Winter brings us more indoors; we are apt to get less fresh air and exercise, to eat heavier food and to be less active generally. These winter-time habits impose heavier burdens upon our hard-working kidneys.

Sluggish kidney function permits retention of poisonous waste in the blood and makes one an easier victim of winter's colds and chills. Presence of these unfiltered toxins makes itself felt in many unpleasant ways. One is apt to feel tired, achy and listless — to have drowsy headaches, dizziness and perhaps a dull, "toxic" backache That the kidneys are not functioning as they should is often shown by scanty or burning secretions.

At such times the use of a stimulant diuretic* to the kidneys is indicated. Doan's Pills act on the kidneys only. Grateful users the country over recommend them. Ask your neighbor!

News of Menlo Park

Judge Shurtleff Honored

Among the last acts of Governor Richardson was the appointment of Judge Charles A. Shurtlef of Menlo Park as a member of the State Land Settlement Board in place of Mr. Fleishhacker, resigned. The governor wanted to honor Mr. Shurtleff before retiring. It is understood that the judge could have had one of the state railroad commissionership's position if he wanted it. Mr. Shurtleff was a strong supporter of Governor Richardson at the primary election.

Drug Store Robbed

The Clema Drug Store on the highway was broken into and robbed on on Tuesday night. An entrance was effected by an aperture made in one of the panels of the glass door in front of the building. About $50 in merchandise and cash was carried off by the looters. The sum of $20 hidden away in the back of the store, several boxes of cigars, fountain pens, four clocks and other articles were removed. The safe containing the narcotics, alco hol and liquor was opened but none of the contents disturbed which would indicate that the perpetrators of the crime were amateurs as these articles could have been readily disposed of by the robbers. Constable F. B. Grill has a clue that may lead to the arrest of the criminals. The job has all the earmarks of being perperated by local individuals, perhaps the same parties who entered the Menlo Pharmacy a short time ago.

Murray Disposes of Ranch

It is rumored that J. J. Murray has disposed of his ranch in Stanford Park to a Palo Alto Syndicate. It is said the price paid for the choice property was $16,000. It is to be subdivided into lots and placed on the market at an early date.

Return From L. A.

Miss E. Noel and Mrs. Iren Boone have returned from Los Angeles where they went to witness the Stanford-Alabama football game. R. E. Boone came with the Alabama team and met his mother in the southern city. The party saw all the interesting places of Los Angeles and had a delightful time. This was Mr. Boone's first visit to California. He went home carrying wonderful impressions of the state. The two local visitors were pleasantly impressed with the beauties of south, its delightful climate, attractive roads and imposing buildings but this did not take a whit away from their ideas of the great possibilities of the peninsula and its potential advancement.

Whalan Property Sold

Mr. Meyer of Atherton has purchased the Whalan property on Menlo avenue, which he is to improve at once. J. N. Pitt has also bought a lot on the same avenue. Mr. Pitt is to erect a commodious residence at once.

John Dix Passes Away

John Dix, the well-known builder and contractor of Atherton, passed away the fore part of the week. He was well liked and known in this community. Many of the buildings at Atherton during the past few years were constructed by him.

To Prepare for Priesthood

Richard Bourett during the week entered St. Joseph's Seminary at Los Altos to prepare himself for the priesthood. He graduated from St. Joseph's parochial school two years ago since which time has has been attending Santa Clar University. His parents live in San Mateo. The two Bourett girls are attending the parochial school here.

Leases Store Here

Mr. Zinek of Palo Alto has leased the unoccupied store in the Mercantile Trust Company's Bank building on Santa Cruz avenue for a radio room for the sale of radios and equipment. This was the only unoccupied store on that street.

Joseph Sullivan Improving

Joseph Sullivan, who was operated upon last Saturday for appendicitis, is improving nicely. Reports from Palo Alto hospital indicate that the boy is improving and will soon be convalescent. His case was a serius one and for a time the boy's relatives were much alarmed.

To Manage Real Estate Business

W. E. Monroe, the local realty broker, has taken over the management of the Fred Croker real estate office in the Brown building. Mr. Monroe was formerly with Dusel and Sieman of this place. Mr. Monroe is a clever salesman and the elusive purchaser may be secured, he is the one to get him.

Alumni Hold Meeting

The third annual meeting of St. Joseph Alumni was held last Sunday in the auditorium of the school. The members were entertained by a committee of the alumni and Bog Griffith and Gene Ward who delivered speeches, telling of former days of the school. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year, J. Morey, president; Miss Mary Weston, vice-president; Miss Mary Alice Sullivan, secretary; Mrs. Louise Herbert, treasurer Frank Morey, sergeant-at-arms. The business of the meeting being over delightful refreshments were served through the kindness and courtesy of Rev. Mother Foley and Rev. Mother Moran. At the festive board Father Kennedy made a very interesting talk, showing his appreciation of the good work the alumni were doing for the school. Miss Weston, Miss Sullivan and Mrs. Herbert, the three pretty officers, delivered well phrazed speeches. J. Morey, the president, also made a neat address, thanking the members for the honors bestowed upon him. These annual gatherings of the school are always a source of joy to the ild pupils and to the devoted teachers who take a pride in the success of the young men and women of the alumni.

C. of C. Elect Officers

The Menlo Park Chamber of Commerce held its annual election of officers last Monday evening. J. H. Sullivan was reelected chairman, J. J. Harcom, vice-president; Miss Emma Noel, secretary; Mrs. Emma J. Stribbling, inancial secretary; The Mercantile Trust Co., treasurer. The following thirteen directors were elected. J. H. Sullivan, W. J. Murray, F. R. Cain, John Morey, D. E. O'Keefe, Emma J. Stribbling, J. J. Harcom, J. W. Pembroke, E. E. Quayle, Miss E. Noel, L. W. Roper, J. Brown and L. H. Clok. The by-laws were amended making the directorate fifteen members. M. McLaughlin and Mr. Croker were added to the board of diredtors.

The chamber is planning a get-together meeting to be held in the near future It went on record as favoring the plan to merge with Palo Alto as a whole. The members discussed the situation very fully contending that it were better to go into Palo Alto as a whole, sooner than permit portions of the territory to be annexed, thus crippling the remainder of Menlo Park. A petition is to be prepared when the Spalding bill becomes a law and presented to the Palo Alto council, who will act upon it. The people here will then have an opportunity to vote upon the question. The chamber in reversing itself believes it is the only way out of an awkward situation, for if parts of Menlo Park are merged with the College town, the remainder of the territory will become the dumping ground for the state. The remaining territory will be too small to incorporate and as the Town of Atherton would not annex Menlo Park the condition becimes alarming. What is the best to be done under the circumstances?

"Tin Hats," With Conrad Nagel

"Tin Hats" with Conrad Nagel and Claire Windsor, featuring will be presented this evenieng in the New Menlo Theatre.
